

EDUARD MEYER'S COMPARISON OF MOHAMMED & JOSEPH SMITH (Italics ours)

In this report we follow Eduard Meyer's Ursprung und Geschichte der Mormonen. (1912) Why?

Eduard Meyer (1853-1930): "His Geschichte des Altertums is considered to be the last word in modern historiography and the most perfectly documented and soundly reasoned a resume' of what is actually known about the peoples of antiquity." (Encycl. Illustrata). "Possessing a perfect knowledge of the Classic World, both Greek and Roman, master of the languages and cultures of some of the major civilizations of the Orient (especially Hebrew and Egyptian)... he had the qualities necessary for the undertaking....The project was not original, but never before (or since) had it been undertaken by anyone with a comparable preparation." (Encl. Italiana). "He had a special preference for the History of Religion which never left him, from his Dissertation (at the age of twenty) to the great work of his old age, The Origin and Beginnings of Christianity." (Brockhaus).

The great Classical scholar, Prof. W. Jaeger, says Meyer's lectures were only interesting when he spoke about the Mormons. Only then, according to Jaeger, was the lecture-hall packed.

p.1. "Among the religious innovations of our time, Mormonism excited my interest at an early age, before all else because of the surprising analogy, extending even to the smallest details, between it and the fundamental drives, external forms, and historical development of Islam: here one might hope to discover significant clues for a proper understanding of Mohammed and his religion. But no less in its own right is Mormonism one of the most instructive phenomena in the whole area of Religious History; and it is most remarkable (though not without many parallels in every area of historical study) that students of religion who have sought enlightenment in the most remote inaccessible, all but incomprehensible religions of the past, have kept themselves entirely aloof from Mormonism and disdained the rich instruction it has to offer..."

67 "It is possible without the slightest exaggeration to designate the Mormons both in their public activities and in their thought forms as the Mohammedans of America. Hence there is hardly another historical parallel as instructive as this one... It is impossible to undertake the scholarly investigation of the one without a closer acquaintance with the other. The parallel between Joseph Smith and Mohammed was often pointed out by the contemporaries of the prophet of the Mormons and it is indeed so striking, that it can hardly be overlooked... It is directly apparent in the fundamental idea in which the appearance of either prophet is rooted, and accordingly runs through the whole activity and achievement of both."

NOT just another church:

2. "The uniqueness of Mormonism is...that it is NOT just another of countless sects, but a new revealed religion...we can study its origin and history from an exceptionally rich contemporary store of documents both by its members and their enemies...that in the study of other revealed religions can only be surmised a similar parallel relation in more directly accessible in reality unknown. Since the origin and history of Mormonism possess an extraordinary value for the student of Religious History..."

50. The common claim that Joseph Smith borrowed from the sects around him will not hold up: "The agreements--literal interpretation of the Bible, nearness of the Millennium, baptism by immersion and the rejection of infant baptism--do not go beyond the scope of things which anybody can take directly from the Bible, and are hence frequently met with among the sectarians, for example, the Baptists."
32. "It is a basic teaching of Protestantism that the times of miracles and revelations are past...In Joseph Smith's revelations there is no sign of conscious deception or of outside influence."
49. "But the Book of Mormon is nothing but religion; remove the religious parts of it, and the whole book collapses. The very skeleton of the narrative is full of religious tendencies and associations...In other words: if we remove from it what certainly comes from Joseph Smith, as good as nothing remains."

Joseph Smith, a clue to all the Prophets:

11. "To say he was simply a swindler no more explains J.S. than it explains Amos or Isaiah or Mohammed or Jeanne d'Arc...At all times J.S. has the same complete ascendancy over his followers (including Sidney Rigdon!) that Mohammed had over Abu Bakr and Omar; none of them ever expressed the slightest doubt of his inspiration, let alone laying bare any purported deception, even though many of them fell out with him and were put out of the Church."
53. "Never has a seer or prophet described in such a lucid manner (as in D.C. 9) what goes on in his consciousness (Inner), as it is here given in perfectly understandable terms. This is exactly the manner in which ALL prophetic utterances arise; these are the same spiritual as those experienced by an Isaiah or Jeremiah, a Zoroaster or Mohammed, and countless others--or, for example, by the Maid of Orleans...Smith also mixes honest conviction with self-deception and with lies and forgery, which are entirely characteristic of this state of mind." {High talents but all pro & con & self-deceived}
13. "It is easier to reach a confident conclusion about Mohammed, Abu Bakr, Omar, than about Joseph Smith or Brigham Young in spite of the relatively much greater amount of material surviving concerning the latter...But even where the material is as scarce as it is about Amos and Hosea, Isaiah and Jeremiah or Zoroaster and Vasiel, the psychological problem remains the same. It is the case of Joseph Smith that sheds light on all the others and helps us reach an understanding of the fundamental problem."
26. "For the Mormons God has, naturally, a physical body, just as all spirits have, including the spirits of men--just as they do in the Old Testament and in Islam, or as did the resurrected Jesus, agreeable to the doctrine of the resurrection of the flesh."

THE FUNDAMENTAL DIFFERENCES BETWEEN MOHAMMED AND JOSEPH SMITH

In all the points in which they are alike, according to Meyer, Mohammed and Joseph Smith also resemble all the other prophets. Where the two differ, it is J.S. only who resembles the older prophets:

1. Mohammed emphatically disclaimed the possession of the miraculous gifts and powers held by the prophets of old.
2. Mohammed did not prophesy of the future.

3. Mohammed introduced no new ordinances but accepted the established institutions. The great prophets of the dispensations--Noah, Abraham, Moses, Christ, all restored or introduced ordinances not on the earth in their time. J.S. resorted the rites of the Temple.

81. "In a crude environment and low caste society, Joseph Smith thinks of spiritual things in far cruder and more materialistic way than Mohammed...Smith lives and breathes in a magic world as do all those around him, and all of its manifestations, visions, healings, ecstasies, etc., are quite everyday things to him and his followers...For Mohammed, on the other hand, the only miracle (the "sign") is the revelation of the words of the divine book (and the earlier events they describe) along with the accompanying appearance of the angel; he forcefully denied possessing any of the other miraculous powers possessed by the ancient prophets; the idea of any miraculous powers in possession of his followers is utterly out of the question."

80. The most important difference between Mohammed and Joseph Smith is that the latter believed "in the continuation of direct prophetic inspiration, along with charismatic gifts of tongues, healing, etc." Almost as important is the doctrine of "the personal inspiration which every faithful member can receive for himself"...,"Mohammed, on the other hand, knows only the one book, the Bible, of which he has but a dim conception; this book was 'sent down' from time to time to prophets." Both men believed their revelations were in complete accord with this, and represented a new sending down or dispensation.

82. "Both think of God as having corporeal form: but Smith in his first vision sees God Himself, the Father and the Son, just as Moses and others (Isaiah, Abraham, Jacob, Paul, Ezekiel, Jeremiah, etc.) saw him; while to Mohammed only the angel appears."

80. According to Tabari and Ibn Ishaq, Mohammed's first revelation was followed by a period of desperate doubt and misgiving, during which he even contemplated suicide. He had to be assured by his wife's cousin, the Christian Waraqah, that the vision he had had was not a false one. "For Joseph Smith, on the other hand, it is a most distinctive characteristic, that any such sort of doubt or misgiving is utterly out of the question."

81. "It was a naive confidence in himself which Smith possessed to an astounding degree."

82. "In the tribulations of his earlier years, Mohammed was able to win the loyalty of men of such superior intelligence and high social position as Abu Bekr and Omar and to command their unswerving submission; while Joseph Smith's followers belonged almost without exception to the dregs of the people, and the first to follow him later fell away and were expelled from the Church."

(Having given their pledges of support to Mohammed, his followers could not break them, being bound by social custom and political and family ties. Many maintained a personal and party loyalty to Mohammed who made light of his prophetic calling; when the conquest started rolling in the lifetime of the Prophet, many joined him frankly because it was the safe and profitable thing to do. On the other hand, many disgruntled persons deserted the dangerous and unpopular cause of Joseph Smith, who never denied his prophetic calling. As Meyer notes, many were "expelled" (thrown out, "ausgestossen") from the Church. Jos. Smith did not solicit their support or make any concessions to them. Meyer's commentary on the followers of Jos. Smith is exactly that made by early Jews and Pagans about the followers of Christ. e. g., Celsus).

THE HOLY BOOKS

82. "Both believe in the miraculous book which they behold in a vision: but Smith claims that he actually dug it up and kept it in his house until after the 'translation', when the angel took it back; for Mohammed it always remains in the hands of the angel."
82. "Smith translates with the help of the seer-stones which he puts in his hat; Mohammed repeats what the angel reads to him. Smith copies out the peculiar written characters of the holy book; such a thing would never have occurred to Mohammed. Hence, Mohammed's revelations, in spite of all the monotony of the Quran, are definitely superior to those of Joseph Smith; in his case we feel, at least in the earlier Suras, something of the force of a conviction won through genuinely strenuous mental effort, and even at times a poetic exaltation."
42. The Book of Mormon: "The style is clumsy and monotonous in the highest degree... the vocabulary is exceedingly limited, except for the numerous peculiar words and proper names invented by the author, in which he gives his imagination free rein... It is greatly inferior to the Quran, the monotony and triviality of that book are bad enough; no one but a believer will ever bring himself to reading it clear through."

J.S. accepts all previous Scriptures as still valid. Since all scripture has the same message, it is all valuable and never loses its validity. Islam, on the other hand, regards the Quran as superseding and rendering obsolete all previous Scripture. For this reason even the most learned Moslems are astonishingly ignorant of the Bible.

The B.M. was produced in a very short time by a very young man BEFORE he had any education at all. The Koran was produced by Mohammed over a period of 25 years; it was begun 15 years AFTER Mohammed had become a wealthy man; he had traveled a great deal and come into much contact with Christian and Jewish teachers; many think it insulting to assume that with all his study, travel, and important business dealings Mohammed remained illiterate.

71. Mohammed had no witnesses, instead, "With emphatic solemn affirmations and oaths by the works of his might, God affirms the reality of the Prophet's story," It is the Book itself, that constantly reaffirms and passionately asserts its divinity,
24. The Three Witnesses: "The essential thing is, that this vision was for the Three Witnesses an absolutely real occurrence, on the complete and literal actuality of which none of them ever betrayed the slightest trace of a doubt. The opponents of the Mormons made every conceivable effort to get these men to retract their testimonies and to admit that there was a deception; but they remained unshaken, and continued to the end of their lives to affirm the truth of the revelation and the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. Far harder to explain is the testimony of the eight witnesses." Meyer gives it up.

28. How explain the witnesses? "But the prophet was no trained hypostate or magician; he was a completely uneducated person." It was "an environment full of the wildest superstition and the most boundless religious fantasy" that did the trick. To prove this, Meyer, like Mrs. Dredge, describes a revival meeting in Kentucky in 1790:

The teachings of the Koran, like those of the Bible, soon came under the control of the schoolmen. ~~THIS WAS~~ The Jewish and Christian doctors were completely under the spell of the philosophical heritage of the U. of Alexandria; so also the Moslem doctors. It was from them that the scholasticism of the N.A. took its teachings. In every case the basic problem was the same; how to make the One, Incomprehensible, Indescribable, Absolutely simple God of the Philosophers conform to the image of God presented by the Scriptures, and how to reconcile Sole and Sovereign Will and Absolute and Irresistible Power with a Universe full of struggle, opposition, evil, and a humanity free to do as it pleases and capable of wickedness, misery and suffering.

Like Christianity, Islam split into two religions, popular superstition on the one hand, continuing ancient local cult practices all over the N. and Middle East, and abstract philosophical speculation on the other.

Mormonism has never suffered this split and it is commonly denied classification as Christian Church because it does not accept the creeds of the philosophers nor engage in scholastic speculation.

31. While no sources report Joseph Smith's claims at length in 1823 and 1830, "all speculations about Mohammed's beginnings come from a time long after the official tradition had been established," and mostly come from his young wife Ayesha, years after Mohammed had received his official position. In the earliest accounts the angel is not named; only later is he called Gabriel.

THE REAL PARALLEL: MORMONISM AND EARLY CHRISTIANITY

The guiding principle of all of Meyer's religious studies is absolute denial of revelation. This was fashionable 50 years ago (see our G-2 Reports 1 & 2); it required depicting Jesus as a teacher of morals and nothing more:

- 278ff. Mormonism is NOT Christian because "Jesus never functioned as a prophet... For him God was only a loving Father whose commands he has a right to preach as being religiously true... Jesus' concept of resurrection had absolutely nothing to do with an afterlife. It is the magical awakening of the body to new life... Jesus' activity is totally different from that of John the Baptist - a prophet, or forerunner, or Mohammed of Joseph Smith; he is rather a prophet of the body, who has nothing to do with the resurrection of their inner evidence...But Christianity is NOT the teaching of Jesus of Nazareth," the Gospels were invented and attributed to him many years after his death. "Unlike Joseph Smith, Jesus NEVER claimed direct revelation, to say nothing of materializing such things; NEVER did HE have a vision (Note 1. "...it goes without saying that the Gospel of John is utterly worthless as a source."), and NEVER once did he predict future events (Footnote; "Of course Mt. 24, etc. since they teach quite differently do not count!"), nor ever did he refer in any way to any event taking place on this earth."

For Meyer, Mormonism MOST CLOSELY resembles Primitive Christianity, which fortunately had no real connection with Jesus:

277. "During our historical presentation, the thoughts of the reader, as the rise and fortunes of the Mormon Church passed before his eyes, must often have strayed to the beginnings of Christianity...The atmosphere in which Christianity arose was also pregnant with magic ideas; supernatural influences of divine and satanic powers were taken for granted and were daily occurrences; the natural course of events was again and again interrupted by miraculous intervention from above...visions, appearances of angels and other spirits, miraculous healings and the casting out of devils meet us at every step of the way. Jesus himself shared these beliefs; for him too, the constant intervention of the other world was something to be taken for granted...The miracles of Jesus were exactly such as are found everywhere in times of religious excitement."
17. The First Vision is "a borrowing from the Transfiguration of Christ...Yet to him (J.S.) it was undoubtedly a real experience, which no one was ever able to talk him out of....There is no doubt at all that the golden plates, even though his mother and others say they were kept in a box in Smith's house, never existed in the real world."
- 282-3. The stories of the Transfiguration and the Ascension are pure fiction.
4. a, 1. "Jesus of Nazareth and Buddha do not belong among the prophets, and they founded no religions; instead the religions attached themselves to them and their teachings." (Nu-Pearly Land and about 1930)
50. "Between Mohammed and Joseph Smith there is also in this regard a perfect resemblance (in their personal morals); only in the case of Smith everything is more grotesquely presented, his public career is far more cynical, so that here the prophet cannot be distinguished from the charlatan. That is because he comes from a far lower social level than that of the Arabian Prophet, and because in spite of the outer veneer of civilization his environment was on a level far inferior to that of the...courtly aristocracy of Mecca. But there cannot be the slightest doubt, that the same common factors, although to varying degrees, occur in the case of every prophet." Meyer illustrates with Amos, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezechiel. "In the case of Ezechiel the mantle of the prophet is nothing but a mask, and his visions are literary fabrications, mostly of the most disgusting nature; it is doubtful whether he ever experienced a prophetic impulse." (Here Meyer brings against Joseph Smith the classic charge anciently made against Christ.)

THE HISTORICAL POINT

2. Mormonism enables us to study "the factors which...make possible the construction of a great religion striving for world rule."

(Having by his own confession, never studied the Book of Mormon, Meyer is unaware of the clear and repeated prophecies that the Church would not and could not play the dominant role in world history--it was to remain small and poor until the end. This false premise leads Meyer to a false conclusion:

2. "Though it has not been destroyed, as, for example, was the empire and religion of the Mahdi of Khartum and his Cha'bi, still it has sunk from the position of a coming world religion to a sect of something the type of Judaism or the Parsees today."

The Koran is more like the D.C. than the B.M., a number of separate revelations given over a number of years on special occasions. The D.& C. differs from the Koran in important essentials:

1. It contains many prophesies of things to come.
2. It establishes holy ordinances.
3. It deals with the organization of the Church in detail.

During the lifetime of Mohammed Islam had a highly centralized theocratic rule. The Prophet held all authority, but he exercised it wisely by seeking the counsel of the Companions, his true and proven friends. No provision was taken for the future government of Islam, however; each of the "Four Legitimate Caliphs" was chosen by chance and intrigue, no principle of succession having been established, and since their day the headship of Islam has ALWAYS been a matter of doubt and dispute.

UNLIKE MORMONISM, ISLAM DOES SEEK TEMPORAL DOMINION:

Qaduri (b. 362 A.H.): Art. 1. "To slay the unbelievers is an obligation, even though they have committed no aggression."

Art. 5. "And it is necessary to call upon those who have been invited to receive Islam and have not replied. And if they refuse, ask the help of God against them, and make war upon them and bring up against them machines of war, and send water against them (i.e., burn down their houses), and cut down their trees, and ruin their crops."

Mormonism preaches the continuation of revelation as long as there are worthy people upon the earth. Islam taught all revelation ceased forever with Mohammed.

Mormonism teaches that God's people must always be led by prophets. The Early Christians and the Jews also taught this, and both bitterly lamented the loss of the prophets. Islam accepts no prophet since Mohammed--1300 years without a prophet!

The lack of direct revelation set picus Mormons on channels of mysticism and spiritual exercises, exactly as it did the Christians. Such resorts are not necessary where the members of the church are allowed to receive direct revelation.

2. On the other hand, the author's statement that

"...the influence of the Patriarchs was immense and their word was law. The country and territories of several millions of people fell under their jurisdiction. They taught and brought up the population. Their religious and spiritual leadership was absolute. Their contention that among the Chinese the religion was originally orthodox is completely false. Canton in the days of the Patriarchs was the hub of a great international culture."

C. E. Bright: One of the remarkable results of archaeological research during the period between the two wars was the sudden appearance of the "Tomb of Tutankhamen".

THE TERRITORY OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ARE SUBJECT TO THE JURISDICTION OF THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, WHICH IS THE POLICE POWER OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Keeley: "I suppose we know more about what went on right in the West Coast ports than anyone else when we're about this time of year." (Continued on page 2)

(b) That the Board may, by resolution, make such rules and regulations as it deems necessary for the proper administration of the Fund.

...the prophetical literature of the Old Testament is not to be regarded as the literary product of the people, but the product of the prophetical school. ... In the same way it is to be regarded as the literary product of the school of the prophets. ... In the school of the prophets there was no break in the tradition of the cult prophets in general, every stress must be laid on continuity,³

H. Rowley: "That the prophets were not merely preachers of righteousness, but forecasters of the future, is plain to every reader."

J. J. Gammie: "The malignant structure of the OT high criticism is not to be denied, but the honest and upright can longer be expected to live in it. ... The critical school has done its best, and cannot claim to have done more than it did, but it has done its best."

J. A. Thompson: "The main task of the Higher Criticism is to expose the fallacies of the old school, and to establish the truth of Biblical criticism. ... The main task of the new school is to expose the fallacies of the old school, and to establish the truth of Biblical criticism."

THE NEW CRITICISM

J. J. Gammie: "The new critical school (and of course really higher criticism) is the orthodox school. ... This type of teaching should go on in our age of discovery when biblical scholarship is so exciting is, so to speak, a perverse miracle."

J. F. Albright: "Even today the majority of OT scholars follow blindly in the trail of Wellhausen, assuring a three-fold evolution of biblical literature through the early poems and sages, the oracular phase, and the legal phase."

C. Gordon: "Though Bible scholars form an army of unprejudiced discoverers, they are still too much under the influence of the old school."

J. J. Gammie: "Both the old and the new schools of criticism are guilty of a lack of originality and of a lack of the spirit of research. ... Both the old and the new schools of criticism are guilty of a lack of originality and of a lack of the spirit of research. ... Both the old and the new schools of criticism are guilty of a lack of originality and of a lack of the spirit of research."

THE NEW CRITICISM IN BRIEF:

1. THEORY OF THE TEXT

The theory of the ancient document has now become widely established. ... The theory of the ancient document has now become widely established. ... The theory of the ancient document has now become widely established. ... The theory of the ancient document has now become widely established.

gathered in the N.T. text are often laden with apologetical significance, and may have had historical motivations. "Indeed, it may appear to have reached an impasse at one time."

"...the most important factor in the development of New Testament studies has been the recognition of the importance of historical methods in the study of the New Testament. This is a recognition which has come only recently, and it has been slow in coming. The recognition of the historical value of the New Testament in the light of new methods and new archaeological, textual, paleographical, and historical discoveries," for 1951, says the General "It has been in the hands of Christian scholars... For 75 years scholars have been presenting their most brilliant ideas... But, not only between the continent and America, but within the American group, differences are larger than ever, largely because of the failure of our scholars to settle upon an agreed formula."

"...that this theory is incorrect is now evident and the date is contemporary, and that the date of Jesus must be placed in the first century before the birth of Christ, and that the date of the New Testament is also required." (1) The Dead Sea Scrolls show "This the usual second-century date for much of the New Testament, especially John, is fallacious." These discoveries abolish "the common view that Jesus was a teacher of ethics who represented the highest level then reached by Judaism, that later Christology is mainly the work of Paul.".. "This represents a volte face of such drastic character that it may well require several decades for the majority of unprejudiced scholars to accept it."

Farewell to the "gentle teacher":

H. Riesenfeld at the NT Congress at Oxford in 1957 exploded "a bomb-shell": "...the tradition of the sayings and deeds of Jesus must be traced back to Jesus Himself." Christology was produced by "neither mission preaching nor the communal instruction of the Primitive Church, but the teaching and parables of Jesus." Until now "the opposite view has been held and in some circles has been exalted into the position of an accented doctrine," i.e. the Christology was a product of evolution.

"...the attempt to discover the historical Jesus is bound to fail when so many irreconcilable legends have entered into the stream of tradition. His career respects no part of the great teachings of Judaism, and in respect to fairness for the Gospels it is impossible to conceive of any other method than that of the critical method, which, however, has not yet been applied to the New Testament. The critical method, however, is not yet fully developed, and it is not yet clear what its results will be."

"...the critical method, however, is not yet fully developed, and it is not yet clear what its results will be."

12. THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

The author of the Fourth Gospel is not concerned to give time-shifts, there is no attempt to identify the events of John with those of the Synoptic Gospels.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

Effects: The ultimate purpose of John is to inspire; that is, the ability of revelation, the authority of scripture, the witness of the church, the present incarnation in Jesus Christ, based on the words of the Logos, to stimulate and direct the Christian heart. That is, to stir up the soul to a realization of the present of grace. Christian belief must be based on the words of Jesus, Christian faith must be based on the words of Jesus.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

John's gospel is not a history, it is a spiritual life, as at 3:21, "He who has been born of God does not sin." This is the central theme of the gospel.

including apocryphal and伪福音书, and the New Christian Church,⁷ to the good historical authority for this, he usually add evidence in the NT and from the second century. A new addition to what given by H. J. Schurer, from which it is clear that in the 2nd c. the Christian Church that the apocryphal books were not regarded as canonical.

It is also clear that the NT was not regarded as divine Christ and that at least the first Christians did not regard it as such. See, e.g., 1 Cor. 11:22.

Theological and critical studies of the apocryphal books in the public domain of recent years, and especially their official recognition of the Apocryphal Canon, are beginning to prove very⁸ as scholars now recognize the concept of source criticism in the New Testament and the necessity of translating the text.

THE TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE

The translation of the Bible into English has been an indispensable factor in the development of English literature and English thought. Before the Reformation, the English Bible was the chief source of cultural studies and by a long way the best.

The English Bible of the 16th century, though far from perfect, is indeed a great work of art, and its influence on the language and literature of England is incalculable.

It is well known that the English Bible of the 16th century was not the first English translation of the Bible. There had been earlier ones, but they were not translations of the whole Bible.

The first English translation of the whole Bible was made by John Wycliffe in the early part of the 14th century. It was a very poor translation, and it was not widely used.

The next English translation of the whole Bible was made by Miles Coverdale in 1525. This was a much better translation than the Wycliffe one, but it was still not very good. The next English translation of the whole Bible was made by John Rogers in 1535. This was a very good translation, and it was widely used.

John Broadley's first point is the obvious one that human authorship is also assumed for all books of the Bible. 'Holy men of God spake' is quite definitely stated of the writers of the OT. These men used ordinary media. They adopted or adapted known literary forms, as the Lord Jesus Christ himself took flesh in the will of man, as he lived in the form of human flesh.

John Broadley's second point is that the term 'scripture' is not used in the New Testament, and that the term 'scripture' is not used in the New Testament.

The third point is that the term 'scripture' is not used in the New Testament, and that the term 'scripture' is not used in the New Testament.

G. Murray's question to us: By what authority? The authority (he declare some books scripture and others not) was duly declared, but it continued to be disputed, down even into the 19th century. A new terminology is needed...the current classification...as Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha is outworn and misleading, supported neither by history nor by present fact."

G-2 Report, No. 2

"REVELATION" NO LONGER A NAUGHTY WORD:

S. V. McCasland: (1954) "The return to ideas of inspiration and revelation may be put down as one of the marked trends of our biblical scholarship of the last decade."

G. W. Bromiley: "The doctrine of inspiration continues to be in many ways the critical issue underlying all other issues in the Church today."

E. G. Selwyn: "Terms such as 'transcendent,' 'supernatural,' 'transsubjective' have been used to describe the new order of being which the Gospel unveils and the new quality of experience which it has introduced; and though the scientific naturalist...may boggle at them, they are indispensable."

H. D. McDonald: "The fundamental question of all theological reconstructions is 'What do we mean by revelation?'...It is being answered in a way that sounds very different from traditional formulations....One thing, however, is certain. Behind these modern ideas of revelation stand a deliberate renunciation of the 'traditional' doctrine and a departure from what the Church has from the first believed concerning special revelation."

C. N. Cochrane: The greatest contribution of the ancient Christian Church was "faith in the God of revelation." This put an end to the "search for causes" that had preoccupied the philosophers until then."

A. Van den Born: "Of course it is highly discouraging that not a single aspect of biblical orphethism can be explained by means of our western rationalism and psychologism, but so matters are situated and we shall have to submit to it."

D. N. B. Reardon: Nineteenth-century Liberalism is past. "Our current theology insists upon the truths of divine transcendence and on 'objective' revelation. Revelation, we are told, is something more than...the progressive self-realization of Spirit in history..." The conventional view of religious experience sees "nothing other than the embodiment of a capacity rooted in human nature itself. On this view its interest is primarily psychological and cultural." We can no longer call it religious.

"NEO CATHOLIC" AND THE TREND TO LITERARISM

O. Cullmann: "The historical character of salvation, which Bultmann regards as unacceptable to the modern mind...is not a secondary element, but it is the essence of the thought of the NT...We must maintain the 'scandalon' of the historical even, the 'foolishness of the cross'".

E. Hengel: "False...is the spiritualization of the Old Testament ideas in the interest of their better utilization for religious purposes."

S. Koenigshofer: "One fails to appreciate the peculiar character of Israel or Jewish religion if one does not take into account its close relationship to both history and the marketplace." (See also Neinrichs 75).

M. Burrows: "I do not want my eschatology de-eschatologized...I do not want to read other philosophies out of the gospel in order to read my own into it. I do not want to read anything into it. I want to understand it. Only so can I tell what it may mean for me."

J. R. W. Scott: "...are we to regard lightly the Scriptures to which he gave his reverent assent? Can we repudiate what he (Christ) embraced?"

W. G. Van Unnik: "According to me we must first listen to what the New Testament had to say then before we can hear what it has to say now..."

R. Marle: "Today we are reproducing what the Primitive Christians must have done. But it is not enough to find out what the original Christians believed--we must make our beliefs coincide with theirs in order to understand them." This is the direction of research today.

O. Cullmann: "In interpreting the first Christian documents by way of the philosophical approach of the individual existence, we ascribe to their authors a preoccupation which, in any case, is not primary for them, and we make mythical and timeless what they regarded to be real and temporal."

A. Nygren: "It is not the New Testament that needs to be de-mythologized, but our modern view of Christianity."

J. F. Walvoord: "If a literal view of the temple and the sacrifices be allowed, it provides a more intimate view of worship in the millennium than might otherwise be afforded."

F. A. N. Spencer: "By accepting the literal return of Christ, we remove the strain "of having to content his message, ignoring a considerable portion of it and making unwarranted deductions from other parts, to suit our preconceptions. It gives a sense of relief, of illumination, of enlargement. We begin to see now, The world has NOT reformed itself or allowed itself to be reformed by God in love. But then Christ did not say it would...Yet in what way could God most adequately reveal himself to humanity? Surely through a human person....Are we to hope that increasing evangelistic ardour and ecclesiastical efficiency will produce in the near future what preachers and prophets and pastors have NOT succeeded in accomplishing during all the centuries since Christ appeared on earth--namely the general conversion to living faith in God, needed to forestall the creeping degeneration and maybe certain destruction with which mankind is threatened?"

C. Gordon: "When literal meaning is brushed aside as poetic license in order to make room for predilection, prejudice, theory or outside parallels, the results are bad, although they may gain wide credence for a long time."

C. S. Lewis: "Either this man (Jesus) was, and is, the Son of God: or else a madman or something worse. You can shut Him up for a fool, you can spit on Him and kill Him as a demon; or you can fall at His feet and call Him Lord and God. But don't let us come with any patronizing nonsense about His being a "gentleman from heaven". He has not left that open to us. He didn't invent us."

G. C. Berkouwer: "We speak rather glibly about the self-evidence of the Gospel; we talk about the Word or the Spirit. But we do not entertain the expectation that something is actually going to happen by the power of the Spirit....Do we still believe in the usefulness of our theological labors?... Is our polemic with liberal theology only a game we are playing?"

W. F. Albright: Of all the world religions ONLY Christianity "can be said to have a completely historical orientation; characteristic of the compelling force of this orientation is the fact that its two most important offshoots, Islam and Mormonism, continue to exhibit marked historical tendencies. Mormonism actually possesses an alleged historical authentication in the form of the Book of Mormon, purporting to give the ancient history of the New World in imitation of the Bible."

(Christianity is the ONE "completely historical" religion, and Mormonism is the one completely historical Christian faith!)

THE NEW ESCHATOLOGY OF SCIENCE.

A. Science renounces Eschatology:

R. Courant & H. Robbins: (1941) "Yet for scientific procedure it is important to discard elements of a metaphysical character. To renounce the goal of comprehending the 'thing in itself', of knowing the 'ultimate truth', of unraveling the innermost essence of the world, may be a psychological hardship for naive enthusiasts, but in fact it was one of the most fruitful turns in modern thinking."

Fred Hoyle: "But if we ask why the laws of physics are as they are, we shall receive only the answer that the laws of physics have consequences that agree with observation. But we must then be satisfied. We must not go on to ask why,"

J. Weaver: In scientific equations, "you must accept the result, be thankful, and ask no further questions....It is impossible to explain phenomena... All you can do...is to deal successfully with phenomena....This is a rather shocking thing to say--that science does NOT furnish any really ultimate or satisfying explanation....science is superbly successful at dealing with phenomena, but...it possesses the inherent defect...that it cannot furnish ultimate explanation....Scientists--even the greatest ones in the most advanced fields of physics, such as Einstein and Bohr and Planck and Dirac--cannot agree as to whether and how science explains anything."

J. Weaver: "Yes, triumphs of the physical scientists are impressive enough to explain why science has a great reputation....But the mysteries of life--perhaps they are intended to remain mysteries. (Italics Weaver's)

B. But cannot leave it alone:

M. O. Tamm: "Even so, here we are, and we had better find some meaning or invent one for ourselves so that we have some definite mission to lend dignity to our life. If there is a meaning, it's obviously this somewhere in the vast fields of biology which only begin to open up to us, and we should hope that it is at least worth looking for by the usual rational experimental approach."

AMERICAN UNIVERSITY

(This statement, made by an eminent biologist in 1960, is a classic: We must have faith in the scientific approach whose first principle is the renunciation of faith. We must seek meaning by a method which as its first step renounces any intention of seeking for meaning. Since this man is a biologist, the secret of all life is "obviously" to be found in biology alone, specifically in an area of biology which is "still unknown to us!" How naive can you get?)

S. Freud (1927) "No, science is no illusion. But it would be an illusion to suppose that we could get anywhere else what it cannot give us."

(i.e., there is no knowledge but scientific knowledge: what Science cannot tell us, nothing can ever tell us. These are the concluding words of a book which is required reading by all freshmen at U.C., Berkeley).

W. Weaver: "So science has, it seems, been so successful that it had inevitably earned a great and strange reputation. If it has never been defeated, presumably it is all-powerful. And since science is, after all, the work of scientists...then presumably these scientists are both so clever and so wise that they can do anything. Perhaps we should turn over the world to this superbreed...Perhaps they should design not only the churches, but the creeds also...The sad fact is that some scientists appear to believe precisely this."

A. Standen: "So far are they from having learned any humility, they are known in every high school and among the freshmen and sophomores of every college as the most unsufferable, cocksure know-it-alls....They knew the last word about the electron, and they seem to think they are entitled to pour scorn on other subjects from a very great height....They propose to solve the problem of war by having a committee of sociologists apply the scientific method to the differences between nations...They are uneducated in the fullest sense of the word."

Having renounced all traffic with Religion, the Scientist proceeds to devote hundreds of hours to giving public lectures on "Science and Religion." This is an interesting paradox:

- a) The secret of the Scientist's superiority and success is that he pays strict attention to the problem at hand; limiting himself to the laboratory situation, he rejects all else as extraneous and irrelevant.
- b) This means that the problem at hand is everything that counts.
- c) If that is so, nothing else counts--Science is all in all.
- d) Therefore Science alone can give the answers to the ultimate problems of life.
(This is exactly the position taken by Freud above.)
- e) But the ultimate problems of life are exactly what Science must renounce in order to be Science!

For a Scientist to talk of, e.g., "The Relationship Between Science and Religion" is as meaningless as for him to lecture on "The Place of the Supernatural in the Laboratory,"--and for the same reason. His function as a scientist rules out any consideration of either. The greatest chemist alive knows no more about Man's Origin and Destiny than anybody else does.

A. Bevan: You cannot have "a moral law based on natural science," since "no possible piling up" of facts "could yield any conclusion as to what ought to be or have been."

SELF-CORRECTING OR SELF-REBUKING?

A. Standen: "If the climax and pinnacle of science is our knowledge of the atom now, then what was known ten years ago must have been decidedly imperfect...and the science of fifty years ago hardly worth knowing. Using a little imagination, we can ask what will become of the science of today, some twenty or thirty years from now?" (Italics Standen's)

E. A. Hooton: "The great lesson of the Piltdown business for me is that it is unwise to accept current scientific decisions and 'proofs' as final, irrevocable, and conclusive, no matter how authoritative they may sound or look. Always keep in mind the possibility, however small it may presently appear, that future evidence and improved scientific techniques may alter that proof, conclusion, or decision."

A. W. Herre: "Each new fashion or advancement in research was hailed as just the thing to solve all life's mysteries, sometimes as leading the way to creating life in the laboratory. Always just around the corner was the answer to all the riddles..."

A. N. Whitehead: "In those years from the 1880's to the first world war, who ever dreamed that the ideas and institutions which then looked so stable would be impermanent?...Fifty-seven years ago it was, when I was a young man in the University of Cambridge. I was taught science and mathematics by brilliant men and I did well in them; since the turn of the century I have lived to see every one of the basic assumptions of both set aside... the most fundamental assumptions of supposedly exact sciences set aside. And yet in the face of that, the discoverers of the new hypotheses in science are declaring, 'Now at last, we have certitude!'--when some of the assumptions which we have seen upset had endured for more than twenty centuries."

Karl R. Popper: "Science is not a system of certain, or well-established statements, nor is it a system which steadily advances towards a state of finality...The demand for scientific objectivity makes it inevitable that every scientific statement must remain tentative forever." (Italics Popper's.)

(The scientist readily admits that he was wrong yesterday, but dogmatically insists that he is right today. We can believe him when he says he was wrong, but can we believe him when he says he is right today? We said that yesterday, too! Science cannot be self-correcting until it knows the correct answers. But as long as it is progressing, the answers will be changing--science is not self-correcting but self-rebuking.)

A. W. Herre: "One can hardly make any statement about plants or animals but what it will be found that there are organisms which refute or contradict his remarks by their lives....My single greatest lesson was these words spoken by David Starr Jordan: 'Authority? There is no authority!'"

M. Kline: "As mathematicians now realize, any logical system must start with undefined concepts, and it is the axioms of the system, and only these, that specify the properties of all the concepts used in the proofs. Without being aware of this, Euclid did the right thing: he ignored his worthless definitions of point, curve, and straight line, so that in effect these concepts were undefined, and he proceeded to state the ten axioms of his geometry."

F. A. Vliet: "Newton's first law illustrates another point, that the physical sciences are based on an act of faith. 'Every body continues...' this can never be proved... but we must believe it because we see that it is full of these taoistical concepts, those emanations of the human mind...scientific investigation is an art."

EDUARD MEYER'S COMPARISON OF MOHAMED & JOSEPH SMITH (Italics ours)

In this report we follow Eduard Meyer's Ursprung und Geschichte der Mormonen. (1912) Why?

Eduard Meyer (1855-1930): "His Geschichte des Altertums is considered to be the last word in modern historiography and the most perfectly documented and soundly reasoned a resumé of what is actually known about the peoples of Antiquity." (Enciclop. Ilustrada). "Possessing a perfect knowledge of the Classic World, both Greek and Roman, master of the language and cultures of some of the major civilizations of the Orient (especially Hebrew and Egyptian)... he had the qualities necessary for the undertaking. The project was not original, but never before (or since) had it been undertaken by anyone with a comparable preparation." (Enc. Italiana). "He had a special preference for the History of Religion which never left him, from his Dissertation (at the age of twenty) to the great work of his old age, The Origin and Beginnings of Christianity." (Brockhaus).

The great Classical scholar, Prof. W. Jaeger, says Meyer's lectures were only interesting when he spoke about the Mormons. Only then, according to Jaeger, was the lecture-hall packed.

p.1. "Among the religious innovations of our time, Mormonism excited my interest at an early age, before all else because of the surprising analogies extending even to the smallest details, between it and the fundamental drives, external forms, and historical development of Islam: here one might hope to discover significant clues for a proper understanding of Mohammed and his religion. But no less in its own right is Mormonism one of the most instructive phenomena in the whole area of Religious History; and it is most remarkable (thought not without many parallels in every area of historical study) that students of religion who have sought enlightenment in the most remote, inaccessible, all but incomprehensible religions of the past, have kept themselves strictly aloof from Mormonism and disdained the rich instruction it has to offer..."

67. "It is possible without the slightest exaggeration to designate the Mormons both in their public activities and in their thought forms as the Mohammedans of America. Hence there is hardly another historical parallel as instructive as this one... It is impossible to undertake the scholarly investigation of the one without a closer acquaintance with the other. The parallels between Joseph Smith and Mohammed was often pointed out by the contemporaries of the prophet of the Mormons and it is indeed so striking, that it can hardly be overlooked... It is directly apparent in the fundamental idea in which the appearance of either prophet is rooted, and accordingly runs through the whole activity and achievement of both."

NOT just another church:

2. "The uniqueness of Mormonism is...that it is NOT just another of countless sects, but a/ new revealed religion...we can study its origin and history from an exceptionally rich contemporary store of documents both by its members and their enemies...What in the study of other revealed religions can only be surmised after painful research is here directly accessible in reliable witnesses. Hence the origin and history of Mormonism possesses great and unusual value for the student of Religious History..."

50. The common claim that Joseph Smith borrowed from the sects around him will not hold up: "The agreements~~COL~~lateral interpretation of the Bible, nearness of the Millennium, baptism by immersion and the rejection of infant baptism--do not go beyond the scope of things which anybody can take directly from the Bible, and are hence frequently met with among the sectarians, for example, the Baptists."

32. "It is a basic teaching of Protestantism that the times of miracles and revelations are past...In Joseph Smith's revelations there is no sign of conscious deception or of outside influence."

49. "But the Book of Mormon is nothing but religion; remove the religious parts of it, and the whole book collapses. The very skeleton of the ~~xx~~ narrative is full of religious tendencies and associations...In other words: if we remove from it what certainly comes from Joseph Smith, as good as nothing remains."

Joseph Smith, a clue to all the Prophets:

11. "To say he was simply a swindler no more explains J.S. than it explain Amos or Isaiah or Mohammed or Jeanne d'Arc...At all times J.S. has the same complete ascendancy over his followers (including Sidney Rigdon) that Mohammed had over Abu Bekr and Omar; none of them ever expressed the slightest doubt of his inspiration, let alone laying bare any purported deception even though many of them fell out with him and were put out of the Church."

53. "Never has a ~~xx~~ seer or prophet described in such a lucid manner (as in D.&C. 9) what goes on in his consciousness (Innera), as it is here given in perfectly understandable terms. This is exactly the manner in which All prophetic utterances arise; these are the same spiritual things as those experienced by an Isaiah or Jeremiah, a Zoroaster or Mohammed, and countless others--or, for example, by the Maid of Orlcans...Smith also mixes honest conviction with self-deception and with lies and forgery, which are entire characteristic of this state of mind." (Meyer believes that all prophets are self-deceived)

13. It is easier to reach a confident conclusion about Mohammed, Abu Bekr, Omar, than about Joseph Smith or Brigham Young in spite of the relatively much greater amount of material surviving concerning the latter...But even where the material is as scarce as it is about Amos and Hosea, Isaiah and Jeremiah or Zoroaster and Hesiod, the psychological problem remains the same. It is the case of Joseph Smith that sheds light on all the others and helps us reach an understanding of the fundamental problem."

26. "For the Mormons God has, naturally, a physical body, just as all spirits have, including the spirits of men--just as they do in the Old Testament as in Islam, or as did the resurrected Jesus, agreeable to the doctrine of the resurrection of the flesh."

THE FUNDAMENTAL DIFFERENCES BETWEEN MOHAMMED AND JOSEPH SMITH

In all the points in which they are alike, according to Meyer, Mohammed and Joseph Smith also resemble all the other prophets. Where the two differ, it is J.S. only who resembles the older prophets:

1. Mohammed emphatically disclaimed the possession of the miraculous gifts and powers held by the prophets of old.
2. Mohammed did not prophesy of the future.

3. Mohammed introduced no new ordinances but accepted the established institutions. The great prophets of the dispensations--Noah, Abraham, Moses, Christ, all restored or introduced ordinances not on the earth in their time. J.S. restored the rites of the Temple

81. "In a crude environment and low caste society, Joseph Smith thinks of spiritual things in far cruder and more materialistic way than Mohammed... Smith lives and breathes in a magic world as do all those around him; and all of its manifestations, visions, healings, ecstasies, etc., are quite everyday things to him and his followers!.. For Mohammed, on the other hand the only miracle (the "sign") is the revelation of the words of the divine book (and the earlier events they describe) along with the accompanying appearance of the angel; he forcefully denied possessing any of the other miraculous powers possessed by the ancient prophets; the idea of any miraculous powers in possession of his followers is utterly out of the question."

80. The most important difference between Mohammed and Joseph Smith is that the latter believed "in the continuation of direct prophetic inspiration, along with charismatic gifts of tongues, healing, etc." Almost as important is the doctrine of "the personal inspiration which every faithful member can receive for himself"..."Mohammed, on the other hand, knows only the one book, the Bible, of which he has but a dim conception; this book was "Sent down" from time to time to prophets." Both men believed their revelations were in complete accord with this, and represented a new sending down or dispensations.

82. "Both think of God as having corporeal form: but Smith in his first vision sees God Himself, the Father and the Son, just as Moses and other (Isaiah, Abraham, Jacob, Paul, Ezekiel, Jeremiah, etc.) saw him; while to Mohammed only the angel appears."

60. According to Tabari and Ibn Ishaq, Mohammed's first revelation was followed by a period of desperate doubt and misgiving, during which he even contemplated suicide. He had to be assured by his wife's cousin, the Christian Warqa, that the vision he had had was not a false one. "For Joseph Smith, on the other hand, it is a most distinctive characteristic, that any such sort of doubt or misgiving is utterly out of the question."

51. "It was a naive confidence in himself which Smith possessed to an astounding degree."

82. "In the tribulations of his earlier years, Mohammed was able to win the loyalty of men of such superior intelligence and high social position as Abu Bekr and Omar and to command their unswerving submission; while Joseph Smith's followers belonged almost without exception to the groups of the people, and the first to follow him later fell away and were expelled from the Church."

(Having given their pledges of unconditional support to Mohammed, his followers can not break them, being bound by social custom and political and family ties. Many maintained a personal and party loyalty to Mohammed who made light of his prophetic calling; when the conquest started rolling in the influence of the Prophet, many joined him frankly because it was the safe and profitable thing to do. On the other hand, many disgruntled persons deserted the dangerous and unpopular cause of Joseph Smith, who never denied his prophetic calling. As Meyer notes, many were "expelled" (thrown out, "excommunicated" from the Church. Jos. Smith did not solicit their support or make any concessions to them. Meyer's commentary on the followers of Jos. Smith is:

THE HOLY BOOKS

82. "Both believe in the miraculous book which they behold in a vision: but Smith claims that he actually dug it up and kept it in his house until after the 'translation', when the angel took it back; for Mohammed it always remains in the hands of the angel."

82. "Smith 'translates with the help of the seer-stones which he puts in his hat; Mohammed repeats what the angel reads to him. Smith copies out the peculiar written characters of the holy book; such a thing would never have occurred to Mohammed. Hence, Mohammed's revelations, in spite of all the monotony of the Quran, are definitely superior to those of Joseph Smith; in his case we feel, at least in the earlier Suras, something of the force of a conviction won through genuinely strenuous mental effort, and even at times a Poetic exaltation."

42. The Book of Mormon: "The style is clumsy and monotonous in the highest degree... the vocabulary is exceedingly limited, except for the numerous peculiar words and proper names invented by the author, in which he gives his imagination free rein... It is greatly inferior to the Quran, the monotony and triviality of that book are bad enough; no one but a believer will ever bring himself to reading it clear through."

J.S. accepts all previous Scriptures as still valid. Since all scripture has the same message, it is all valuable and never loses its validity. Islam, on the other hand, regards the Quran as superseding and rendering obsolete all previous Scripture. For this reason even the most learned Moslems are astonishingly ignorant of the Bible.

The B.M. was produced in a very short time by a very young man BEFORE he had any education at all. The Koran was produced by Mohammed over a period of 25 years; it was begun 15 years AFTER Mohammed had become a wealthy man; he had traveled a great deal and come into much contact with Christian and Jewish teachers; many think it insulting to assume that with all his study, travel, and important business dealings Mohammed remained illiterate.

71. Mohammed had no witnesses, instead, "With emphatic solemn affirmations and oaths by the works of his might, God affirms the reality of the Prophet's story," It is the Book itself, that constantly reaffirms and passionately asserts its divinity.

24. The Three Witnesses: "The essential thing is, that this vision was for the Three Witnesses an absolutely real occurrence, on the complete and literal actuality of which none of them ever betrayed the slightest trace of a doubt. The opponents of the Mormons made every conceivable effort to get these men to retract their testimonies and to admit that there was a deception; but they remained unshaken, and continued to the end of their lives to affirm the truth of the revelation and the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. Far harder to explain is the testimony of the eight witnesses." Meyer gives it up.

28. How explain the witnesses? "But the prophet was no trained hypnotist or magician; he was a completely uneducated person." It was "an environment full of the wildest superstition and the most boundless religious fantasy" that did the trick. To prove this, Meyer, like Mrs. Brodie, describes a revival meeting in Kentucky in 1799!

The teachings of the Koran, like those of the Bible, soon came under the control of the schoolmen. The Jewish and Christian doctors were completely under the spell of the philosophical heritage of the U. of Alexandria; so also the Moslem doctors. It was from them that the scholasticism of the M.A. took its teachings. In every case the basic problem was the same; how to make the One, Incomprehensible, Indescribable Absolutely simple God of the Philosophers conform to the image of God presented by the Scriptures, and how to reconcile his Sole and Sovereign Will and Absolute and Irresistible Power with a Universe full of struggle, opposition, evil, and a humanity free to do as it pleases and capable of wickedness, misery and suffering.

Like Christianity, Islam split into two religions, popular superstition on the one hand, continuing ancient local cult practices all over the N. and Middle East, and abstract philosophical speculation on the other.

Mormonism has never suffered this split and it is commonly denied classification as Christian Church because it does not accept the creeds of the philosophers nor engage in scholastic speculation.

61. While newspapers report Joseph Smith's claims at length in 1829 and 1830, "All traditions about Mohammed's beginnings come from a time long after the official tradition had been established," and mostly come from his youngest wife, Ayesha, years after Mohammed had received his official position. In the earliest accounts the angel is not named; only later is he called Gabriel.

THE REAL PARALLEL: MORMONISM AND EARLY CHRISTIANITY

The guiding principle of all of Meyer's religious studies is absolute denial of revelation. This was fashionable 50 years ago (see our C-2 Reports 1 & 2!); it required depicting Jesus as a teacher of morals and nothing more:

273ff. Mormonism is NOT Christian because "Jesus never functioned as a prophet...For Him God was only a loving Father whose commands he has a right to preach as being religiously true...Jesus' concept of resurrection had absolutely nothing to do with an afterlife. It is the magical awakening of the body to new life...Jesus' activity is totally different from that of John the Baptist, a prophet, or Zoroaster, or Mohammed or Joseph Smith who is rather a teacher like Buddha, propounding religious truths with the authority of their inner evidence...But Christianity is NOT the teaching of Jesus of Nazareth," the Gospels were invented and attributed to him many years after his death. "Unlike Joseph Smith, Jesus NEVER claimed direct revelation, to say nothing of materializing such things; NEVER did HE have a vision (Note 1. "It goes without saying that the Gospel of John is utterly worthless as a source."), and NEVER once did he predict future events (Footnote: "Of course Mt. 24, etc. since they teach quite differently do not count!"). nor ever did he refer in any way to any event taking place on this earth."

The Koran is more like the D.C. than the ~~the~~ B.M., a number of separate revelations given over a number of years on special occasions. The D.C. differs from the Koran in important essentials:

1. It contains many prophesies of things to come.
2. It established holy ordinances.
3. It deals with the organization of the Church in detail.

During the lifetime of Mohammed Islam had a highly centralized theocratic rule. The Prophet held all authority, but he exercised it wisely by seeking the counsel of the Companions, his true and proven friends. No provision was taken for the future government of Islam, however; each of the "Four Legitimate Caliphs" was chosen by chance and intrigue, no principle of succession having been established, and since their day the headship of Islam has ALWAYS been a matter of doubt and dispute.

UNLIKE MORMONISM, ISLAM DOES SEEK TEMPORAL DOMINION:

Qaduri (b. 362 A.H.): Art. 1. "To slay the unbelievers is an obligation even though they have committed no aggression."

Art. 5. "And it is necessary to call upon those who have been invited to receive Islam and have not replied. And if they refuse, ask the help of God against them, and make war upon them and bring up against them machings of war, and send water against them (i.e., burn down their houses), and cut down their trees, and ruin their crops."

Mormonism preaches the continuation of revelation as long as there are worthy people upon the earth. Islam taught that all revelation ceased forever with Mohammed.

Mormonism teaches that God's people must always be led by prophets. The Early Christians and the Jews also taught this, and both bitterly lamented the loss of the prophets. Islam accepts no prophet since Mohammed 1300 years without a prophet!

The lack of direct revelation set pious Moslems on channels of mysticism and spiritual exercises, exactly as it did the Christians. Such resorts are not necessary where the members of the church are allowed to receive direct revelation.

For Meyer, Mormonism MOST CLOSELY resembles Primitive Christianity, which fortunately had no real connection with Jesus:

277. "During our historical presentation, the thoughts of the reader, as the rise and fortunes of the Mormon Church passed before his eyes, must often have strayed to the beginnings of Christianity...The atmosphere in which Christianity arose was also pregnant with magic ideas; supernatural influences of divine and satanic powers were taken for granted and were daily occurrences; the natural course of events was again and again interrupted by miraculous intervention from above...visions, appearances of angels and other spirits, miraculous healings and the casting out of devils meet us at every step of the way. Jesus himself shared those beliefs; for him, too, the constant intervention of the other world was something to be taken for granted...The miracles of Jesus were exactly such as are found everywhere in times of religious excitement."

17. The First Vision is "a borrowing from the Transfiguration of Christ... Yet to him (J.S.) it was undoubtedly a real experience, which no one was ever able to talk him out of....There is no doubt at all that the golden plates, even though his mother and others say they were kept in a box in Smith's house, never existed in the real world."

282-5. The stories of the Transfiguration and the Ascension are pure fictions.

4. n.l. "Jesus of Nazareth and Buddha do not belong among the prophets, as they founded no religions; instead the religions attached themselves to them and their teachings." (The Party Line until about 1930)

59. "Between Mohammed and Joseph Smith there is also in this regard a perfect resemblance (in their personal morals); only in the case of Smith everything is more grotesquely presented, his public career is far more cynical, so that here the prophet cannot be distinguished from the charlatan. That is because he comes from a far lower social level than that of the Arabian Prophet, and because in spite of the outer veneer of civilization his environment was on a level far inferior to that of the...courtly aristocracy of Mecca. But there cannot be the slightest doubt, that the same common factors, although to varying degrees, occur in the case of every prophet." Meyer illustrates with Amos, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezechiel. "In the case of Ezechiel the mantle of the prophet is nothing but a mask, and his visions are literary fabrications, mostly of the most disgusting nature; it is doubtful whether he ever experienced a prophetic impulse." (Here Meyer brings against Joseph Smith the classic charge anciently made against Christ.)

THE HISTORICAL PROBLEM

2. Mormonism enables us to study "the factors which...make possible the construction of a great religion striving for world rule." (Having by his own confession, never studied the Book of Mormon, Meyer is unaware of the clear and repeated prophecies that the Church would not only could not play the dominant role in world history--it was to remain small and poor until the end. This false premise leads Meyer to a false conclusion.)

2. "Though it has not been destroyed, as, for example, was the empire and religion of the Mahdi of Khartum and his Khalifa, (?) still it has sunk from the position of a coming world religion to a sect of something like the type of Judaism or the Parsees today."